Dashed lines represent global average.
Dotted lines represent regional average.

People in New Zealand are most worried about road and traffic accidents (71%) and violent crime (66%) causing them serious harm, the two highest levels of concern among the ten risks asked about. Across all ten, worry in New Zealand runs lower than the global average. Concern far outstrips lived experience, however: while 71% worry about road and traffic accidents, only 9% have actually been harmed by it in the past two years. The harm most commonly experienced in New Zealand is mental health issues (17%). The gap between worry and experience is widest for road and traffic accidents, where 71% are worried but 9% have actually been affected.
